BRISTOL MAN KILLED IN NAVY AIRPLANE CRASH

PHILA. MAN DROWNS AS HE AND PAL FALL OFF BOAT INTO RIVER

Wm. Lyons, 29, Drowns As Thos. Culbertson is Rescued By Those On Boat

THREE DETAINED HERE

Four Left Phila. Early Last Evening and Spent Evening in Burlington

One of two men who fell from a boat in the Delaware river off Jones Beach early this morning, drowned. The other was rescued by his friends who were in a cabin cruiser.

The drowned: William Lyons, 29, single, 5233 Pennway avenue, Philadelphia.

The three companions of Lyons are being detained here by the police until the details of the tragedy have been cleared up.

With Lyons at the time of the drowning were Walter W. Reibrich, 25, 4124 N. 5th street; Thomas Culbertson, 28, 1853 E. Huntington street, and James Thorpe, 45, 2525 Emerald street, all of Philadelphia.

According to Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo and Penna. Motor Police of the Oxford Valley barracks, the drowning occurred this morning at 1:30, off Maple Beach on the Penna. side of the river, about opposite the power house of the Public Service Corporation, which is below Burlington.

The authorities say that the story told by the three survivors of the yachting party was substantially as follows:

Culbertson, Lyons and Thorpe left Philadelphia early last evening in Lyons' car. The trio met Reibrich and the four went to the Quaker City Yacht Club where Reibrich took the party aboard his cabin cruiser "Halcyon." The cruiser was headed up the Delaware and the four landed at Burlington where they spent some time and then returned to the boat.

With Reibrich at the wheel in the stern and Thorpe nearby, the four cruised about the river with Culbertson and Lyons sitting on the bow. Culbertson and Lyons were fooling and in a half-wrestling attitude both rolled over the right side of the boat into the water.

Reibrich and Thorpe tossed life preservers to the men as neither could swim. Culbertson grabbed one preserver and was dragged aboard, but Lyons went down, and despite the efforts of his friends, was drowned.

The men returned to Burlington and reported to the police what had occurred. They located the spot at about which the drowning occurred and fixed it on the Penna. side of the stream. Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo was called and also the Penna. Motor Police.

Reibrich, Culbertson and Thorpe were brought to Bristol police headquarters and questioned. Then Reibrich was taken back to Burlington to bring his boat to Bristol. Culbertson and Thorpe were detained.

Grappling for the body started but up until noon it had not been recovered.

NONEGENARIAN MARKS BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Newtown Woman is Recipient of Congratulations and Many Gifts

NEWTOWN, Aug. 12—A nonegenarian residing in this borough is being congratulated by her many relatives and friends upon attaining such an advanced age.

Mrs. Lloyd Ridge, North Chancellor street, celebrated her 90th birthday anniversary on Thursday, and was recipient of many gifts and cards.

Mrs. Ridge is a member of Newtown Presbyterian Church, Bible Class, and Missionary Society, and rarely misses a meeting. She is an active member of the Newtown W. C. T. U. As a member of the Bucks County Historical Society and Bucks County Natural Science Association, she attends the meetings and the field trips of the latter.

Always a great traveller, having visited the Pacific Coast, the National Parks and Lake Louise in Canada, she still retains her love of seeing everything worthwhile. Last year she travelled with her sisters to the new Sky-Line Drive and to the restored Williamsburg village in Virginia.

This year she visited the New York World's Fair and announces her intention of going again before the Fair is over. Trips to the seashore and mountain lakes are commonplace to her.

As befits a descendant of colonial families she is well versed in genealogy not only her own but of the many other families whose descendants have built up the Founders county.

She is a great reader and keeps abreast of the times. She is a registered voter and votes both at the primaries and general elections. Although a Democrat nearly all her life she found the New Deal methods more than she could accept and recently changed her registration.

She was born August 10, 1849, the daughter of the late Jesse Shallcross Wilson and Martha Conly Wilson.

She married Lloyd Ridge and for a great many years they farmed one of the best kept farms in Lower Bucks County.

Since the death of her husband about 20 years ago, Mrs. Ridge has lived in Newtown.

MORRISVILLE MAIL SERVICE PROGRESSES

Free Delivery Has Been Established for Period of 14 Years

NOW HAS FOUR ROUTES

MORRISVILLE, Aug. 12—This borough has had mail delivery for 14 years and last week marked the beginning of the 15th year for this service here. Clarence O. Paxson and Benjamin W. Eisenbrey are the mail carriers and both have been in the service for many years. Paxson started in 1925 when he was authorized by Charles H. Heller, then postmaster, to start the long sought delivery service to homes here and a few days later Eisenbrey was employed.

In that 15-year period, Morrisville's residents have been fortunate in having their post office moved from a small space in the Stockham Building, then the Bridge street office, and later to its new Federal site on North Pennsylvania avenue, a large and modern building occupied since the middle of last year.

While only two carriers worked the first few days, the town has grown and now has four regular routes, with the possibility of having more and even extending its service to residents in the northern end of the borough.

That first week was plenty tough on the two young mail carriers. Paxson worked the upper section of the town up to Trenton avenue, while Eisenbrey delivered on the southern section, below Bridge street.

Later in 1925, Millard C. Nice was added to the carrier service, enabling the post office to give better service and increase its routes to the Highland Park and Arbor Lea sections and other uncovered areas. Four years ago, Harry Wilcox became a regular carrier and the borough was still found to be increasing in size. The parcel post service was active for years, but the government truck, received in 1930, added to a more complete service on parcel post.

Estimating they have walked from 15 to 20 miles per day, Paxson and Eisenbrey found it tough to start but have since got used to their work. Both enjoy the job tremendously, being "out in the air" and coming in contact with people daily. Both have had comparatively little time off because of illness. Paxson losing only about 10 days in his 14-year period. Eisenbrey has lost a half-year because of rheumatism and an appendicitis operation.

Dogs, usually the best or worst friend of the mailmen, followed both carriers for years. Eisenbrey had two dogs, Bobby and Bozo, follow him constantly for seven or eight years, meeting him daily just as his first delivery was made. Bobby was caught by the dog catcher one day, while Bozo died of old age. Paxson has been bitten a couple of times by dogs, but still calls them his friends.

Residents look for the carriers to do many things besides deliver mail. One lady waited for the carrier to assist her in her home when locked out—another wanted a blown-out fuse replaced.

Morrisville, a second class post office, has as its postmaster now, George W. Burgner, who has been in office since succeeding Heller in 1933.

The body will be brought to Bristol at the request of the Armstrong family.

COLORED MAN DENIES MURDERING CO-WORKER

Willie Branch, 38, Identifies Victim, Charlie Hudson, in Doylestown Morgue

MISSING SINCE MAY

Willie (Baltimore) Branch, a 38-year-old negro, who is being held in Doylestown, in connection with the alleged murder of Charlie Hudson, also colored, denied to authorities yesterday that he told a fellow worker that he (Branch) killed the farm-hand a few months ago.

Partial identification of all that is left of the body of Hudson, in Warwick township, near Jamison, was made Thursday at the Leator morgue, Doylestown, by Branch, who earlier in the day is alleged to have told another worker that he had killed the fellow to rob him of $3.

Branch, who is being held together with two others in connection with the finding of the body, was eating a sandwich when Corporal William Herman, of the Doylestown sub-station of Motor Police, took him to the morgue to face the remains of the then unidentified victim.

"Yes, boss, that's Charlie Hudson and his home is somewhere in Philly," Branch told Corporal Herman as he kept on eating his sandwich, showing no outward sign of nervousness.

"I did not kill him; no sir! I had nothing to do with it," Branch said.

For several hours yesterday, Branch was questioned by Privates Kohler and Clifford, as well as Corporal Herman, of the criminal investigation bureau of Doylestown sub-station, Motor Police.

He denied that he told a buddy, Arthur Schultzes, that he had "bumped off" Charlie for $3, and that he wanted Schultzes to go fifty-fifty with him on another killing in order to rob a fellow worker of his money.

People in the vicinity of Jamison, interviewed, were all of the opinion that Branch, known to them as "Baltimore," is "harmless." He is known to have a good nature and is anything but treacherous or spiteful, according to those who have known him since he worked on the Rubincam farm, where all those being held for questioning, were employed.

Dr. H. Clayton Moyer, coroner of Bucks county, called Dr. Stanley M. Moyer, Quakertown, to the morgue to perform an autopsy on the remains. Practically nothing is left but the Armstrong was the son of Warren V. Armstrong, 310 Jefferson avenue. He was born in Bristol 33 years ago and attended St. Mark's parochial school. In January, 1924, he enlisted in the Navy at Philadelphia and chose to become a wireless operator. He was assigned to the airplane carrier Saratoga and then to the Lexington when the fleet came East to visit the New York World's Fair. In May he wrote his parents here and had intended visiting them, but suddenly orders were received for the fleet to sail to the Pacific and the Bristol man was assigned back to the Saratoga. He received his training at Newport, R. I. The first ship upon which he served before entering the Air Corps was the Mississippi.

He is survived by his parents; five brothers, Warren, Jr., and Leonard, Eugene, Joseph and Paul; and five sisters, Catherine, Eleanor, Winifred, Ruth and Rosemary.

Armstrong, radioman first class, was flying with Ensign T. R. Wood, 28, U. S. N. R. Both men were attached to the Bombing Squadron 3 of the Navy Aircraft Carrier Saratoga. The plane caught fire after it crashed and was reduced to a mass of charred wreckage. The accident occurred at 10:30 yesterday morning, which is 2:30 d. s. t. here.

The accident occurred as the fliers were engaged in gunnery exercises about 12 miles north of San Diego.

Wood, whose widow lives in Coronado, was a member of a prominent Tacoma, Wash., family. Before entering the naval service two years ago, he was associated with his father, John W. Wood, in the coffee importing and distributing business. He completed his first training at Pensacola, Fla., July 1, 1938, and nine days later married Miss Bertha Bradford, in Thomasville, Ala.

Bristol and Croydon firemen responded.

Appreciates Article

Dear Stroller:

I was very glad to read the article by the Stroller in Friday's Courier. I think it is time some one tried to make Bristol like other towns.

Not only bathing suits are out of order but there is more rowdiness in Bristol than any place I know of.

Radcliffe street in summer is one continuous parade of half-dressed bathers.

We not only have to look at them but listen to their noise until all hours of the night.

I think it is near time something was done about it.

Yours truly,

FASHION NOTE

The average male needs a dictionary when he attempts to understand women's clothes. This fact has held good ever since women discovered that the male of the species need not always wear the brighter plumage. For a time during recent years it almost seemed that women's wearing apparel would become simple enough for mere man to understand and discuss with intelligence. Gores, gussets, ruffles and a lot of other confusing dressmakers' terms were out. Women at last had acquired sense.

It is discouraging to realize that the last few seasons have knocked all hope of simplicity into a cocked hat. The daring man who attempts to read a fashion report will encounter an alarming confusion of words and phrases. He will find double penguins, unpressed gathers, draped basques and bustle bows, double bell effects, flounces, satins printed in pin dots, mermaid sequins, Goya colors, birdcage panniers, Jane Austen patterns, Astrakhan latticework, shelf panniers—none of which will he ever comprehend or identify in the clothes he actually sees.

This, of course, is the average male, no member of that small army of traitors to the sex who have made the designing of women's clothes a career. To them these mysteries are not strange at all. They make them think up new words to describe them, new colors, new confusion. They have no sympathy or understanding of the plight of their brothers who must go through life blinded to the glories of penguins and the intricacies of birdcage panniers.

Well, there are worse things than not knowing the difference between a ruche and a ruffle. Today so many of the world's affairs are incomprehensible to us all that a few more riddles can be taken in our stride, even such remarkable phenomena as "a gun pocket in the form of a revolver on the back of the right hip of a hunting suit of dark green tweed."

BRIDGES' SENSE OF HUMOR

Harry Bridges, it seems, was only fooling. He is an Australian, and most Australians have a robust sense of humor. Away back in 1935, according to Mr. Bridges, "red-baiting" was such a joke on the Pacific Coast that at the maritime convention in Los Angeles everyone gave the Communist salute, when he entered the convention hall, and addressed the presiding officer as "Commissar Chairman."

But that was all in a spirit of good, clean fun. Mr. Bridges testified at his own deportation hearing in San Francisco, the other day. For his own part he "seldom" had said he was a Communist, "even in a kidding way."

That was very nice of Mr. Bridges. We don't begrudge him good, clean fun; and we are glad that he has a robust Australian sense of humor. But we wish that he would make that sense of humor work both ways. Why can't he face the possibility of deportation to his native land in the same cheery spirit which was his when his colleagues were giving the Communist salute and saying "Commissar Chairman?"

Let him be a good sport to the end of the trail and say: "So I'm a Communist, eh? That's really funny. Well, goodbye. Maybe we'll see each other again some day—in Australia."

"REDHEADS ARE LUCKY"
BY VERA BROWN

SYNOPSIS
"Mike" Shannon, petite red-headed magazine counter girl at the Eureka Hotel, had bitten the already renowned left hand of "Handsome" Larry Regan while he was stifling her cry of alarm. She ran into him as he—a famous rookie big league pitcher—was trying to sneak to his hotel room via a rear entrance in order to elude the vigilance of a team "curfew law spotter." Handsome had been drinking a little. He apologized to Mike and persuaded the indignant red-head to accompany him to a nearby lunch room. Though she saved him from the club's "curfew scout," she was still annoyed with the brash young athlete when he let her go home alone.

CHAPTER III
Mike was working from ten to six the next day. She found it hard to drag herself out of bed. Her mother had gone on to the hospital when Mike awakened, and Mary and Jack were at school. The house was a mess. Mike tried to straighten things as she waited for the coffee to boil, but it was a hopeless task.
If Mike dressed with unusual care that morning, combed her rebellious red bob with more deliberation, she did not admit it to herself.
On the way to work via the subway Mike read the newspaper. She tried to appear unconcerned as she turned directly to the sport pages. There, a sports writer was giving the low-down on "Handsome."
"The Sheik from Charlotte is causing Ace Barnes a lot of headaches," the writer commented. "Ace may take some drastic disciplinary action with the freshman pitcher." That should make Handsome's headache better this morning!
She arrived at the hotel promptly at 10, and went to work. Mornings were always busy, but Mike watched the clock.
It was not more than 15 minutes after Mike had come on duty that she looked across the counter to see Handsome towering there before her. He seemed in the pink of condition. He appeared perfectly satisfied with the world.
"Hello, Mike. How's everything?" Just as casually as though he'd been greeting her there every morning for weeks. He bought a morning paper, but made sure as he took his change from her that she saw the splash of iodine on his left hand. Mike felt her cheeks burn, but she answered his greeting conventionally enough. Then he remarked:
"I didn't know you'd be to work so early. What time are you through tonight?"
Mike was sure she would not answer. But of course she did.
"Six o'clock today."
"What have the boys got to say about me this morning?" he said as he turned to the sports pages of his newspaper.
"Nothing very cheering," Mike could not resist that thrust.
"I suppose not. They like taking cracks at me." He glanced rapidly through the columns, spotted the one she had seen on the subway. He threw down the paper.
"I ought to bust that guy right in the nose! He's got his nerve."
"Maybe it's true, what it says." "I don't care about that. Maybe it is. But look what he calls me... Sheik of Charlotte!"
An adoring bell boy came with Larry's mail. There was a stack of it, some in colored envelopes.
"Fan mail?" Mike's eyes were twinkling.
"Yes, women. Tell me, Mike, why are women such nuts?"
"You should know."
Handsome did not answer as he flipped through the pile, picked out one.
"From home. I'll read it while I eat breakfast. Come and sit with me."
"I can't, I'm working."
Regan started away and turned back with an afterthought. "I'll be back by six and we'll eat." He brushed aside Mike's protests. "Unless the game runs over-time." Then he was gone before Mike could protest further.

The day passed slowly although she was busy. In the afternoon the radio was on in the further corner of the lobby. But there was too much noise for Mike to hear the game over in her far corner. She planned just what she'd do that night. She'd get away before Handsome came back to the hotel. That would avoid all trouble. She'd be on her way home. She'd get away— But she didn't. The game was over early and Handsome came strolling into the hotel lobby at a denly. "It's like dope. He's had it, from the time he was three!" They strolled along in the early spring twilight and Mike suddenly felt desperately unhappy. Something warned her: I shouldn't be here with Handsome! But she was. Then Larry took off his hat ceremoniously with a gesture turned it around, put it back on again.

"What's the matter?"
"Cross-eyed woman! They're bad luck for ball players unless you change your hat around." Mike could hardly believe her ears. Then they both laughed. At the restaurant it was as if

The next morning, Mike saw Handsome towering over her... "What time are you through tonight?" he asked before reading the "roasts" in the newspapers... quarter to six looking so clean and fresh and immaculate, that it was no wonder everybody turned to look at him as he made his way toward the magazine counter.
"I'm starving," were his first words. "How long before you can get out of here?"
"Not until six o'clock... But I must get home right after dinner." He was impatient: "Well, hurry up. I'll be down again in a few minutes."
Of course the gossip had got around that hotel that Handsome Regan was "going" for Mike. In the four years she had worked at the Eureka, Mike had never even had dinner with a guest. So it was something to gossip about. Everybody watched with interest to see whether Mike was having dinner with Regan that night. She felt their curious eyes on her and was embarrassed.
Mr. Downey, the day manager, came over to her counter at six to talk to Larry as he waited. They plunged into argument about the day's play immediately.
"Horton was off his game," Mr. Downey said firmly.
"He never was on it," Larry retorted scornfully. Downey shrugged his shoulders, and smiled.
Mike came back slowly from the creak room where the night before she had met Larry so unceremoniously.
"See this young man gets in at a decent hour, Mike." The girl nodded.
They walked up Broadway, and Mike was pleased at the attention the broad shouldered figure at her side created. Many turned to stare. A newsboy yelled:
"Howay Handsome!"
Larry grinned at him, waved his hand.
"He loves it," Mike realized suddenly. "It's like dope. He's had it, from the time he was three!" They strolled along in the early spring twilight and Mike suddenly felt desperately unhappy. Something warned her: I shouldn't be here with Handsome! But she was. Then Larry took off his hat ceremoniously with a gesture turned it around, put it back on again.

"What's the matter?"
"Cross-eyed woman! They're bad luck for ball players unless you change your hat around." Mike could hardly believe her ears. Then they both laughed. At the restaurant it was as if Mike and Handsome were finally settled with great ease.

"Now, begin," Larry ordered.
"Begin?"
"About yourself."
If Larry was a braggart, he had that quality which also invites confidence. He was a good listener. And Mike found herself telling him all about Jimmie.
"I'll come and see him just as soon as you get him home from the hospital. I'll get Ace Barnes to autograph a ball for him."
When they ordered food, Larry asked for a high-ball.
"No high-ball," One glass of beer, maybe. No more," Mike said firmly.
"O. K., Skipper. One beer, waiter."
Larry grinned down at her. "I can see you're going to be a good influence in my life." He shrugged. "I need that all right. Ace found out today I've been living on hot dogs because I was broke. That mug roommate of mine squealed."
"Do you mean to say you haven't been eating?"
"Not any too regular."
"Larry! That's terrible!"
"So Ace says no more poker games when we're on the road and the gang's wild at me. Why should they blame me? Why don't they blame Travis. He's the one that squeaked. I didn't!"

Agreeing that the fly is a menace to the farmers, the men told of the use of various sprays to be used in the barn and in the house. RITZ THEATRE

Interweaving moving heart throbs with uproarious laughter, "Lucky Night," which comes to the Ritz Theatre, Sunday midnight, unfolds the accidental meeting and later marital careers of Cora Jordan and Bill Overton.

Cora, the spoiled daughter of a millionaire steel magnate, walks out on her fourth engagement to hunt for a job. Bill is a playboy down on his luck. Following an accidental meeting on a park bench, they gamble, frolic and fight their way to fortune, get married, quarrel over the family budget, separate and come together again after a series of mad-as-march-hare complications as hilarious as they are novel.

LANDRETH NINE KNOCKS PITCHER OUT OF THE BOX

Farmers Defeat Point Breeze
By the Score of 7 to 5

BLACK RELIEVES MAHER

Landreth Were Two Runs
Behind in Opening
Inning

After spotting the Point Breeze team two runs in the opening inning, the Landreth team knocked Joe Black, the home team's starting pitcher, out of the box in the next three innings to give them a well earned victory of 7 to 5, at 28th and Snyder avenue, Phila., last night.

"Bill" Maher, for the Farmers also failed to go the distance. He was relieved by Howard Black in the final inning after an error by Liberatore and a base on balls put runners on first and second. Black with the help of Mario Rossi, the Farmers' brilliant third baseman, retired the home team on two pitched balls. His first offering Alex sacrificed, Brasko lined Black's second pitch to Rossi who stepped on third for a double play unassisted ending the game.

Landreth's scored twice in the second inning on hits by Broderick and Rossi and Griggs' triple to left centre field. Successive doubles by Liberatore and Costello, Broderick's sacrifice fly, Rossi's single and Drake's wild throw of Dougherty's grounder put across three in the third session.

Maher safe at first, to open the fourth when Zuzulock messed up his bunt. Vic Rockhill scored him with a triple over the crowd in centre field. Liberatore's sacrifice fly counted Rockhill. Costello followed with a double to left field but was out at third on a close play attempting to stretch it to a triple. A base on balls to Drake, a wild throw by Dougherty and a sacrifice gave the home team two runs in the opening inning. A fielders' choice, Mulligan's hit and Lodge's error on Kranak's short fly scored their second tally in the third. In the fourth Zuzu tripled and Sword singled for the 4th counter.

Kranak's base on balls, an out and Zuzu's single gave them their fifth marker in the fifth inning.

Rossi and Costello led the Landreth team at bat with three hits each. Rockhill's running catch of Norback's drive in the third inning and Liberatore's fielding were features.

Tomorrow at three o'clock, Landreth will play the Phila. Irish Stars at Landreth Ball Park, the team which defeated them last Sunday.

GIVES HUNTING SEASON AND BAG LIMITS FOR 1939

On page two of this issue will be found a legal notice published by the Pennsylvania Game Commission, as required by law, giving the hunting seasons and bag limits for 1939. Better clip them out for reference. Whenever in doubt concerning any phase of the Game Law, write direct to the Game Commission at Harrisburg.

The 1939 Pennsylvania hunting season will be more liberal than for a number of years and the sportsmen for the first time in four years will enjoy a full month of hunting for most kinds of game, and larger bag limits for a number of species, according to the announcements by the Pennsylvania Game Commission. Bag limits, for instance, have been increased for ruffed grouse, bobwhite quail, ringneck pheasants, and raccoons. The small game season will open November 1 and close November 30, except in the case of ruffed grouse, bobwhite quail and Hungarian partridges, the latter in three counties only, for which species the season will close on November 21. All shooting is prohibited until nine o'clock on the morning of the opening day.

The only season to be curtailed was the bear season. Last year it covered a week; this year it will last only four days, from November 15 to November 18, inclusive.

The deer season will extend from December 1 to December 15, on bucks with two or more points to one antler, except in Warren and Forest Counties, that part of Potter County lying north of U. S. Highway 6, and that part of Jefferson County lying northwest of U. S. Highway 119, said areas being open to the killing of antlerless deer only the last two days by persons who have not killed a buck, or who have not assisted a hunting party in killing the camp limit of bucks. No special permits will be required to hunt antlerless deer in the four counties affected.

Raccoon hunting also starts November 1 and closes December 31; however, the trapping season for raccoons in the counties declared open to trapping, starts November 10 and closes January 31, 1940. Trapping for minks, opossums and skunks also begins November 10, but closes December 31.

For the information of those persons who are not yet familiar with the new woodchuck law, the Game Commission advises that occupants of farms, and any members of their family or hired help who reside thereon and help cultivate the land, have the right to dig groundhogs out of their dens, or kill them in any manner, at any time, when such dens are located in their cultivated fields. Woodchucks may also be dug out of dens in cultivated fields, and after they have been dug out they may be killed in any manner, during the open season by any other person who has first obtained specific permission of the farm's owner or occupant. Such person must immediately replace the earth and level off the surface affected.

UNWELCOME VISITOR

BAKER, Ore. — (INS) — The visitor who rattled the knocker at the office of Earl Emlaw of the Oregon Lumber Company was far from being welcome. The visitor was a four-foot rattler.
